Risk-based Supervision for Securities Regulators from European EMDEs

October 14 – 18, 2024 Virtual

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Regulators seem to have adapted well to the new environment created by the pandemic and have proven to be flexible in their approach to overall supervision. A traditional compliance-based supervisory (CBS) model, a blend of compliance and Risk Based Supervision (RBS), or a fully fledged RBS model may be suitable for jurisdictions depending on the nature of their market and economy.

All regulators recognize the need to be forward-looking, to use scarce resources more efficiently and develop plans for intervening early if a material problem appears. RBS can facilitate development or enhancement of an authority's own risk management framework and supervisory risk appetite, allow for more efficient, targeted supervision, facilitate early detection of emerging problems, enable enhanced use of new supervisory technologies allowing for measured and proportional intervention. In addition, RBS can also aid financial inclusion and responsible market development by enhancing the regulator's ability to have in place best policies and apply its interventions to enhance good practices and influence behaviour by market participants.

This five-half-day virtual program was designed to help securities supervisors and regulators from emerging markets and developing economies (EMDEs) in Europe to better understand risk-based supervision (RBS), improving their effectiveness. It covers key topics such as leadership, operational resilience, environmental, social and, governance (ESG) issues with a focus on climate disclosures, and effective communication with stakeholders – which is crucial for RBS implementation. Participants are expected to develop and present action plans for RBS implementation, drawing on their jurisdiction's specific needs and challenges.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES

This program is designed to enhance participants' understanding and knowledge, and gain a practical perspective on:

- RBS developments to securities sector, primarily in European emerging markets and developing economies
- Fundamental concepts, principles, and strategies for effective RBS implementation
- Intersection of RBS with financial inclusion, proportionality, UN Sustainable Development Goals, and benefits to both regulators and the financial system
- Integration of climate-related risks into RBS

- Methods for identifying significant activities, evaluating risk management performance, and overseeing functions such as an internal audit
- Conducting effective on-site RBS inspections
- Early intervention strategies to strengthen securities regulators and supervisory authorities, boost public confidence, and enhance financial stability and inclusion

METHODOLOGY

This program is designed to be highly interactive and will include group activities, reallife examples and case studies.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

This program is designed for mid- to senior-level officials responsible for overseeing securities markets. A minimum of three years' experience in securities supervision, policy analysis, or market development is recommended.

VIRTUAL NETWORKING SESSION AND PRE-READING

An icebreaker and networking session will be held on Oct. 8. This session aims to facilitate peer interaction and prepare participants for the program's collaborative learning environment. It will emphasize leadership skills, action planning, and effective stakeholder communication, crucial for driving continuous improvement in regulatory practices.

Participants are expected to complete pre-reading materials in advance of the program.

PREREQUISITES

To enhance participants' knowledge and learning experience, this program uses a blended approach of self-paced online learning including pre-recorded videos combined with live/real-time instructor-led sessions. The live sessions will be used to highlight key elements from each RBS topic and address questions from the participants. Participants must complete the self-paced online sessions including watching the videos and pre-readings (including the case study) prior to the start of the program.

This program is held at CEST.
